Where to start

About your two reports, your portal, and what to do this week.

You now have something most golfers never see: a measured picture of your own mental game. Not an opinion, not a feeling after a bad round — a profile based on your own answers, using a model tested on more than 1,000 golfers. This guide takes four minutes to read and makes sure you actually get something out of it in the months ahead.

YOUR TWO REPORTS

Which one, and when?

You have received two documents describing the same profile, but with different jobs. They don't replace each other — they take turns.

The summary

7 PAGES

WHAT IS IN IT

Your overall score, your golfer type, your three phases, your three priorities and a cut-out card for your golf bag.

WHEN TO PICK IT UP

Read this first. Tonight, in one sitting.

WHAT FOR

To know where you stand and what to start with tomorrow. Print the cut-out card and keep it with your scorecard.

Your player profile

AROUND 45 PAGES

WHAT IS IN IT

How your three phases, eight steps and four factors form one loop; all eight steps worked out separately with their forty underlying skills; the four influencing factors with their sixteen sub-factors; plus exercises, background and reflection questions.

WHEN TO PICK IT UP

Not in one sitting. Read part 1 at the weekend, then pick up the chapter for whichever step you are working on that week.

WHAT FOR

To understand why something goes wrong, and what to do about it. The exercises are here.

THE ORDER THAT WORKS

1. Read the summary all the way through — seven pages, once.
2. Pick the first of your three priorities. One, not all three at once.
3. Find that step's chapter in your player profile and read only that.
4. Do the exercise you find there. This week, not one day.
5. Come back in two weeks for the next priority.

> Reading the profile cover to cover and then doing nothing gets you less from your purchase than reading one chapter and actually doing that one exercise.

READING YOUR NUMBERS

Every score runs from 0 to 10, to one decimal. A low score is not a diagnosis and not a verdict — it is where the most gain is waiting. A high score is no reason to sit back: that is your foundation, and you want it to hold when the pressure comes on.

0–3.9 · growth area	4.0–6.9 · working area	7.0–10 · strength

YOUR OWN PACE

There is no clock running on this. One golfer works through their three priorities in a month, another takes half a season — both are fine. What we do see: those who give it a moment every week notice the difference soonest. Not because it takes much time, but because mental habits need repetition rather than long sessions.

Your profile stays a good picture of your game for roughly six to nine months. If you are working at it hard and want to see in black and white what has shifted, a repeat measurement is possible after three months. Sooner makes little sense — you would mostly be measuring how you happen to be playing that week.

WHAT IT COSTS YOU IN PRACTICE

Allow half an hour to read your summary, and about ten minutes a week after that: one exercise to run through, and a quick look back after a round at the holes where your routine slipped. That is less than warming up for a single match.

Those are also exactly the moments where most golfers drop off — not because it is too much, but because nothing reminds them. So put your first exercise in the diary this week, on the day before you play. Do that and a month from now you will have four exercises behind you instead of good intentions.

YOUR PORTAL

What is waiting for you

Your purchase was a starting point, not a one-off document. This is what is waiting in your portal — the first part is already paid for and only needs you to collect it.

INCLUDED IN YOUR PURCHASE

Three training reports

INCLUDED

Choose three topics from the eight steps and four factors. Each one gives you a report of around ten pages: exercises, a weekly plan and reflection questions, written around your score and your handicap.

> This is where your profile turns into training. The portal suggests three topics based on your scores — but you choose. Not collecting them means paying for something and leaving it on the shelf.

Both PDFs, always to hand

INCLUDED

Your player profile and your summary stay in the portal. Download them as often as you like, on any device.

> You never have to dig through your inbox.

SHARING — AND GETTING SOMETHING BACK

Sharing with your pro

INCLUDED

Release your profile to your teaching professional. You switch that on per pro yourself and can switch it off again at any time; without your consent nobody sees anything. Working with more than one pro — one for your swing, one for your short game — works just as well.

> Your pro no longer has to guess what is going on mentally, and you no longer have to explain it. That saves half a lesson of feeling your way in — and lesson time costs more than this entire assessment.

Sharing your result with your fourball

INCLUDED

You can switch on a share link that shows only your first name, your handicap and your twelve scores. No email address, no insights, no report. Turn it on when you want and off when you are done — after that the link stops working.

> Putting scores side by side starts the conversation worth having: why does one of you score high on acceptance and the other on focus? And a partner who is watching keeps you sharper than a resolution nobody knows about.

Earning points

INCLUDED

You have your own referral code. If someone in your fourball takes the assessment through it, you both get twenty points — them too, at no cost. You also earn points for feedback on your report and for extra question sets. From fifteen points you can trade them in: a course booklet, an extra training report, a repeat measurement, or even a full annual membership.

> You pay with attention instead of money. Two playing partners joining in already earns you a free training report — and you have someone to talk it over with afterwards.

WHEN YOU WANT TO GO FURTHER

Your course booklet

$9

A personal pocket-sized booklet: your focus, your situations out on the course, and a log for eight rounds. You get a version to print at home on A4 and a print-ready file if you want it properly bound.

> A report stays at home; this goes out on the course with you. Which is exactly where the mental game happens.

Repeat measurement

$39

After three months you can fill in the questionnaire again. You then get a difference report: what has shifted, what hasn't, and what that means.

> Measuring is the only thing that separates 'it feels better' from 'it is better'. Do wait until you have used your training reports — otherwise you will mostly be measuring that nothing has changed.

Extra training reports

$19 · 3 FOR $49

After your first three you can open the remaining topics too. Request a topic for a second time and you get different angles and different exercises — not a repeat.

> For when you want to go deep on a step rather than touch on it.

Annual membership

$149 PER YEAR

All twelve topics open, your course booklet included, two measurements a year, and a progress view that lines up your scores across every measurement.

> Meant for those working on this for a full season. If you recently paid for a repeat measurement, that is credited.

WHAT TO CHOOSE, AND WHEN

None of this is needed to get started — you already have everything you need. Still, a rule of thumb: if you want to take the mental game out onto the course with you, the booklet is the smallest step. If you want to go deep on one particular step, that is what the extra training reports are for. And if you want to see in black and white six months from now what has changed, the repeat measurement is the one.

If you are working at this for a full season, the annual membership soon costs less than the separate parts together. But feel free to start without it: most golfers only come back here once their first three reports are used up.

GETTING STARTED

What to do this week

Reading changes nothing. This is the difference between a report you have read and a game that changes. Five things — none of them takes a whole evening.

- [ ] Read the summary all the way through
  Seven pages, tonight. Then print the cut-out card and put it in your golf bag.
  You remember almost nothing you read once. What you carry with you, you use.

- [ ] Collect your three training reports
  They are waiting in your portal and are already paid for. Start with the topic at the top of your priorities.
  This is the largest piece of value in your purchase that you have to collect yourself. Leave them sitting there and you have paid for something you never opened.

- [ ] Do one exercise — no course needed
  Much of what you train needs no ball at all. Running through your routine, your breathing before the shot, your reset after a miss, bringing your attention back: you can practise that in the living room, in the car before you leave, or on the mat at the range.
  This is why mental training moves faster than technique: you don't need to be on the course for it. Ten minutes a day adds up to more than one lesson a month.

- [ ] Spend one round watching your playing partners
  During your next round, deliberately watch how your playing partners handle pressure, a missed putt, a risky decision. Not to judge — to see.
  In someone else you spot the pattern you miss in yourself: the shoulders on the first tee, the tempo that changes after a bad shot, the club picked too quickly. And right at that moment you become aware of your own routine. Observing makes the abstract concrete — and it costs you no extra time.

- [ ] Put your report on the table with your pro
  Share your profile with your teaching professional, or bring the summary to your next lesson.
  Your pro can see your swing, but not what happens in your head between two shots. With your profile on the table, the lesson doesn't start from scratch.

And if you do nothing?

Then you have read a good report and nothing changes. That is not a threat, it is simply how it goes: the profile measures where you stand, but it does not put up a fight. Three training reports sitting ready and uncollected are the most expensive unopened post you own.

What this gives you

The first thing golfers notice is not that they strike it better, but that they give away fewer rounds. The round that used to be lost after three holes now stays intact. Your bad days get less bad — and over a season that saves more shots than a few extra yards off the tee.

The second comes later and is harder to measure: you enjoy it more. A golfer who knows what he is doing between two shots stands calmer over the ball. Standing calmer, you play freer. And playing freer, you start looking forward to the next round instead of to the scorecard.

A year from now you want to look back on this moment as the point where you stopped guessing at what was going wrong. You have already done the measuring — that is the part most golfers never do. The rest is a matter of starting.

Enjoy your golf.
